NUTS-Nagging, Unfinished Tasks

Questions for Reflection and Evaluation

As the video points out in the world of squirrels, whoever has the most nuts is a winner. NUTS in our world are nagging, unfinished tasks. And, whoever has the most NUTS is not a winner.

For the squirrel its all fun and games until someone loses a nut. In your business and life it is not fun and games until you start losing or getting rid of the NUTS.

1. Make a list of your Nagging, Unfinished Tasks—these are things that seem to never get done or things that are not done on a timely basis. When a task is done on a timely basis you have gotten clear of it and it is no longer a NUT.
